DECISION AND ORDER

I. Introduction

J. L. L. is the father and obligor of record for his child, T. K. M. (DOB 00/00/96). The custodian of the child is D. S.

The Child Support Services Division ("CSSD") received a request for Modification of an Administrative Child Support and Medical Support Order from the custodian on May 6, 2007. On May 10, 2007, CSSD issued a Notice of Petition for Modification of Administrative Support Order; Mr. L. did not respond to the notice and did not supply any financial information to CSSD.

A Modified Administrative Child Support and Medical Support Order ("modification order") was issued on June 20, 2007; this order increased the child support from $50.00 per month to $624.00 per month for one child. On June 28, 2007, Mr. L. appealed the modification order and requested a hearing.¹

The formal hearing commenced on July 26, 2007, before Administrative Law Judge ("ALJ") James T. Stanley, with the Office of Administrative Hearings ("OAH"). The hearing was recorded. Mr. L. appeared in person and Ms. S. participated by telephone. David Peltier, Child Support Specialist II, appeared in person for CSSD. At the hearing, CSSD provided a formal hearings expense checklist to Mr. L. for his use. Prior to the hearing, CSSD compiled earnings information for Mr. L. from Office of Economic Statistics ("OES"); CSSD selected the category of construction and related worker; CSSD also factored in Mr. L.' permanent fund dividend.

II. Facts²

¹ A child support award may be modified upon a showing of a material change of circumstances. A material change of circumstances will be presumed if child support calculated under Civil Rule 90.3 is more than 15% greater or less than the outstanding support order. Civil Rule 90.3(h) (1) (emphasis added).

² The facts stated herein are drawn from the testimony received at the hearing, and the exhibits admitted into evidence, unless another source is cited.

Mr. L. is single and self-employed. He owns and operates J.'s Handyman Services, a business which offers building maintenance and repair services. Mr. L. owns two residential four-plex buildings and a single family residence. Rental income from one four-plex and the single family residence were minimal during 2006 because Mr. L. owned these properties for only a short portion of the taxable year. Mr. L. resides in one of the two four-plexes.

Mr. L.' household contains six children and his significant other, E. G. Ms. G.is the biological mother of three of the children, and Mr. L. is the biological father of the other three minor children (T., K., and A.). D. S., custodian of T., is not the biological mother of T. ⁵

The gross income of Mr. L. in 2005 was $20,875. In 2006, Mr. L. received business income of $10,611 and a permanent fund dividend of $1107, for a total of $11,718. Mr. L. claims monthly expenses as follows: food, $500; natural gas, $300; water, $150; refuse, $75; telephone, internet and cable (GCI package), $50; sewer, $100; cell phone, $50; vehicle insurance, $175; entertainment, $25; the total of these estimated expenses is $1425 per month. Mr. L. has no automobile installment payments, no credit cards, and no alcohol/tobacco expenses.

III. Discussion

This appeal raises two issues. First, what is the correct child support amount that Mr. L. should be paying for one child? Second, is Mr. L. entitled to a reduction in his child support obligation based on financial hardship as contemplated by Civil Rule 90.3(c)? The purpose of the hearing was to inquire of Mr. L. and obtain a current and accurate picture of his income and expenses. While not articulated in detail, the essence of Mr. L.'s testimony is that he does not have sufficient income to comfortably support his household and pay child support in the amount of $624 per month. Stated differently, if child support is increased from $50.00 per month to $624 (or $668 as urged by CSSD in its post-hearing brief) per month, Mr. L. claims that he will be saddled with an unreasonable financial hardship.

Child support amounts calculated under Civil Rule 90.3 from Mr. L.'s actual income figures are presumed to be correct. Civil Rule 90.3(a)(1) provides that Mr. L.'s child support amount is to be calculated based on his "total income from all sources." Mr. L. may obtain a reduction below the amount calculated, but only if he shows that "good cause" exists to support the reduction. To establish good cause, the obligor must prove by clear and convincing evidence that "manifest injustice would result if the support award were not varied." Depending upon the facts of a particular case, "good cause" might be established by showing "unusual circumstances":

Good cause may include a finding...that unusual circumstances exist which require variation of the award in order to award an amount of support which is just and proper for the parties to contribute toward the nurture and education of their children....¹²

The first task at hand is to calculate what amount of child support Mr. L. should be paying for one child. CSSD has determined in it post-hearing brief that Mr. L.' 2006 total gross income is $41,566.96 by adding his self employment income of $10,611 to the total amount of real property depreciation taken in 2006 for the three properties owned by Mr. L. at the close of the tax year in 2006. In his 2006 federal tax return, Mr. L. claimed MACRS¹³ depreciation in the amount of $28,179. The result of treating depreciation like income is an incorrectly calculated total gross and adjusted annual income.

Depreciation is not income to Mr. L. Depreciation is the amount of money that a taxpayer may deduct from income in his or her federal tax return for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in a trade or business, or of property held for the production of income.

Mr. L. owns a single family residence which is rented to others and is therefore a business. In a similar fashion, Mr. L. owns two four-plex apartment buildings which are rented to others, save one unit which he and his household members occupy. Only the portion of the properties occupied by Mr. L. as a personal residence is not part of the business.

Depreciation does not fall within the definition of "income" as contemplated by Civil Rule 90.3 and as defined in the commentary to Civil Rule 90.3. ¹⁶ While not necessarily exhaustive, the commentary recognizes twenty-nine categories of income and depreciation is not recognized therein as income. Thus, CSSD may not add the depreciation figure to Mr. L.' income for the purpose of calculating his child support obligation.

Mr. L. is the owner of J.'s Handyman Service and his annual income fluctuates as is common with construction related activities. In 2005, Mr. L. had gross business income of $20,875.¹⁷ In 2006, Mr. L. has gross business income of $12,567.¹⁸ The significant difference between two years militates toward using the average of the two years as Mr. L.' annual income for child support calculation purposes; the average for two years is $16,721. Adding the permanent fund dividend for 2006 in the amount of $1107 (rounded) to $16,721 yields an annual income amount of $17,828. Based upon this income, Mr. L.' child support obligation for one child should be $299 per month.¹⁹

The second task at hand is to determine whether Mr. L. has grounds to support lowering his child support amount below $299 per month. While it is true that Mr. L. is under pressure to manage his expenses carefully, doing so is not unreasonable or unfair. His daughter, T., is now eleven years old and her support needs cannot be met at the existing child support level of $50 per month. Mr. L. cannot spend lavishly because his income only slightly exceeds his expenses, he has a reasonably good employment history and he appears to be budgeting his expenditures. As long as Mr. L.' annual income remains low, the rental property depreciation should result in little or no income tax liability. To comfortably meet his financial obligation to his child, he may need additional or different employment, but Mr. L.'s physical and financial situation does not support a finding of "unusual circumstances".

Based on all of the evidence presented, and considering the aggregate circumstances of Mr. L., I do not find that Mr. L.'s case presents unusual circumstances as contemplated by Civil Rule 90.3(c). Mr. L. has not proven by clear and convincing evidence that manifest injustice will result if the child support amount calculated for his child under Civil Rule 90.3 is not reduced below $299 per month.

IV. Conclusion

Based upon all of the evidence in the record, the correct child support amount that Mr. L. should pay for one child, T., is $299 per month. Mr. L. has not proven clear and convincing evidence that payment of child support in the amount of $299 per month will result in manifest injustice.

V. Child Support Order

Mr. L. is liable for modified ongoing child support in the amount of $299 per month, effective June 1, 2007.
